the attention, and the consequence was that long before the racing came to a conclusion.

ROGUE AND BRAUD METHODS.

Franz Notscher, the retiring president, was just the man for the position. A man of considerable experience in racing masters, with clear head and an even temperament, one able to restrain his enthusiasm and volatility of the enthusiastic ones like Haase, as well as to mollify the wounded pride of delegates like Connolly (of Ireland) or Britton (of England). I shall never forget the dignified part he played in the lively little scene we had at the Antwerp meeting. This was the second time the championships were held, and he had considered himself a past master in his art.

In progress an alteration arose between one of these rulers and an English rider named Bradbridge. It was very trifling matter, but it involved the English delegates present in a quarrel they would gladly have been spared. Upon these occasions anyone with a roistering spirit to his side will consider himself a past master in his art.

The phenomenal weather enjoyed during the opening weeks of the present season have been dreary, trying the professional football players who have to turn out and work in the blinding sun for an hour and a half. I am not alone in holding that the whole of our English season has been gradually growing later and later, and that the September of 1898 would just about represent the August of 1897. But just fancy playing football in such conditions! Englishmen have seen men chasing leather in overcoats, and the goalkeeper protecting himself from the inclemency of the weather with an umbrella, but playing a winter game with the thermometer registering something over 80 in the shade suggests that the times are out of joint. September has certainly been a most glorious month in hand, and in a couple of weeks more we will be in October again, time for Yorks, Nottingham, and the other counties who run colomatches to have given the youngsters a chance of showing their ability in decent weather instead of bringing them out in April when raw, marrow-freezing winds are howling around, and the sight of a cricket ball being hit straight and one brought down by a single day's play will be a welcome sight.

Absolutely no provision was made for reporters who had travelled long distances to attend the races, and the officials on the track were extremely disgruntled. This is not as it should be at an important meeting of this kind, and I am afraid that my sanguine expectations concerning the future of the Association and its scope of influence will have to be toned down as the races are held in Europe again. Taking the whole of the series of championship meetings so far, Scotland easily carries the palm for the most organized and efficient, and the others come a poor second.

A few more festivals run on Vienna lines, and we shall soon see the end of the I.C.A.

WORLD'S CHAMPIONS.

The new champions are Albert (Germany) and Cherry (England) in the amateur class, and Becker (American) and Palmer (England) in the professional class. Albert, the amateur mile champion, has been regarded as the coming man for some time now, and from the manner in which he has done in the St. Louis, St. Paul, and Arctic meets in the final it is pretty evident that he has "come." He is a slim, fair youth, with spongy face and laughing eyes, and a finishing sprint that is really brilliant. Cherry, who has distinguished himself over and over again at long distance racing in England, had little difficulty in defeating the American, who had the best last in the German city, when Pottin's friends worried the judges into submission.

In a race run as hard as Albert's is fair, having an olive complexion, and dark hair and eyes, Palmer gained a bloody victory in the 1600 Kilometers race, none of the men entered entering the lists against him. The one-mile professional champion is George A. Douglas (Lapraik & Co., Agents for the Phoenix Fire Office, Hongkong, 17th August, 1897).
